

Authorized Software Policy

Overview

Software, like any other product, can have issues related to interoperability with other manufacturer's products. This is in an attempt to hold onto customers. An example of this problem would be trying to open a Word document in another word processor application such as Word Perfect. Because of the different native file formats each application uses, Word files are not guaranteed to be viewable fully in the Word Perfect application and vice-versa.

Like any other product, software can undergo continuous improvements. Many times, different versions of the same software may not be fully compatible with each other. Again, this is typically a marketing tool of software vendors. By creating incompatibilities it forces users to pay money and upgrade to the latest version of their software.

Both of these issues can cause communication problems within a corporate.

Purpose

The purpose of this document is to provide a standard list of software applications, versions and file formats.
