

TLD Communication Chart

Cell phones, E-mails and Internet have changed the way information moves in a company. It in fact moves much faster than it used to and information can reach many more people than 10 years ago. For these reasons, communication management becomes more demanding and it is necessary to set guidelines which have to be followed within TLD :

1. Answer quickly E-mails and voices mails. If you cannot answer quickly, please at least acknowledge receipt and inform about when you will be likely to answer.
2. Urgent customers related subjects should always be dealt with by priority, except in case of an emergency. Because of the constraints implied by this accepted principle, the term "urgent" should be used appropriately.
3. Use wisely the E-mails and their To and Cc functions. Think twice about the list of persons to whom you send or copy your message : do not oversize this list just because it is easy to do so.
4. Think about communicating efficiently transversally and not always top-down and bottom-up.
5. People who receive copy of an E-mail do not need to answer, but they most of the time need to be subsequently kept in the loop. Always think about closing the loop for all who have been involved or been aware of an issue.
6. Be more diligent in communication with people far away from you and with those that you never met physically. Distance, language and cultural differences may create difficulties and frustration in communication with people you don't meet with on a regular basis.
7. Think about Time difference when you set your priority list of E-mails to be treated. Because of the time differences, sometime 1 hour later can mean 1 day later for the other party.
8. Having sent information and to be waiting for an answer does not mean the work is done. So react if the answer is not coming promptly enough.
9. If you are away for a period of time (vacation, travel,...etc) and it is not a holiday for everybody and you know that you will not be in a position to check Voice mails and E-mails, somebody from your organization must be delegated this task during that period.
10. Do not hesitate to inform your management when you estimate that this Chart is not respected and in particular when things are not going fast enough.
